Fergie's latest c.d. called Dutchess has many good hits such as "Big Girls Don't Cry" or "Fegalicious" and "Clumsy". Those were just the singles released there are also other songs like "All That I Got" also called "The Makeup song" or "Finally" and my personal favorite "Pedestal".

"Pedestal" is a neat up beat song. I love how it is kind of snappy! When I first heard it I didn't want to listen to it completely because I thought the little child's squeaky voice was annoying but actually is not. It is fun and keeps the some unique and sort of alive! Now it is my favorite song on that c.d. well not only on that c.d. but by her. Including all the songs she did with Black Eyed Peas. It is better than all those songs. I love the chorus and how Fergie pronounces each word. She has a brilliant voice that make you fixated on her vocals. I usually don't listen to everything going on in the back ground music but there is so much that you can't help it. It is not so much that it sounds like a crowded song but it is so instrumental. Sometimes flutes join with a little rhythm then different instrument comes in with a something different. You don't really hear all of that going on if you are singing and jamming out with Fergie (which I often do). The only thing I don't like about the song is at the part where Fergie sings "You think I don't see you on the internet?" and you hear typing in the back as a part of the music. I think it would be better without the typing. Thankfully the typing is brief but who knows maybe it needs the typing. I haven't heard it without it so it could be best the way it is. Oh! And I wish it had a music video. I think it would be a good music video. But other than that it is perfect!

I think Fergie kind of like London Bridges because in this song, the child's voice (which I used to think was annoying) is singing "The Pedestal is falling down, falling down, falling down..." which is similar to "Your London bridge is falling down, falling down, falling down...". The only difference is what is falling down. Not only this song but she also has a song called "London Bridge" which is another great song of hers.
